casions in the artistic career when small the artist who c n't be thwarted once he has a real inspiration paints his idea on the inside cover of his thumb box. Often these impressions are the artist's most prized works. A fellow craftsman frequently gives a new painting box, and even something to the control of the c quently gives a new painting box, and even something to boot, a chef d'œuvre painted on the inside lid. This is the origin of the thumb box sketch vogue. The term now has a wider scope and has come to include practically any small painting of the thumb box size.

These thumb box sketches are often ry clever. The Katz collection numbers as many. The cleverness is of all sorts ne serve as delightful color notes, some are clever bits of swift painting, others are charmingly a la Zorn or a la Whistler and none the worse for that. They seem suit the American temperament, inited size, and John Galen Howard, the subhitect, would find some confirmation here of theory that the chief feature and art is "refinement."

Imong such masses of work it is almost unfair to single out individual successes.

Max Kuehne has some strongly painted scenes from the lower part of the city Jona Lie does good things with his pal-ette knife. Walter Farndon shows ar amusing group of seashore bathers, John F. Follinsbee some very effective trees, Marion Bullard shows clever color studies, Ernest Lawson's little group at Powell's has all the brilliancy of old stained glass and another name that always stands for cleverness, now not often encountered, is

W. Van Schaick. Others represented attractively in these shows are Frank S. Chase, Cecil Chichester, Allen Cochran, Clara Davidson, Elmer Livingston MacRae, Marie Strean, Robert Vonnoh, Allen G. Cram, E. V. Cockcrowit, Edward Dufner, Charles W. Eaton, Lawrence W. Grant, Ossip Linde, George H. Macrum, Morris H. Pancoast, Agnes Richmond and Zulma Steele. There isn't a single example of post-impressionism in either exhibition.

Even the early Monday morning plan seemed doomed to failure at first, for the Stage Society workers discovered that the artical managers and theatre owners had the idea that the police might feel miffed if they marched forth to uphold the Sunday law by stopping a play only to find that it wasn't a Sunday play at all, but a Monday one, and all to march right back again. The owners remarked that they certainly did not want to do anything to "offend". owners remarked that they certainly did not want to do anything to "offend" the police.
